

When relationships decay and fall into disrepair, we are left alone, standing in the husks of what once was human connection. How do we navigate to others across vast, empty distances? How do we find warmth when it hides behind trees, fog, and a bad signal?